It's a tragic fact, but nonetheless true, that if Mister Longfellow had lived in the 20th century, he probably wouldn't have mentioned the spreading chestnut tree in his poem about the village blacksmith! 'Cause the chestnut tree is almost extinct, the victim of a mysterious blight.

* * *
Now comes the news that the state ly elm tree, which shades the street of thousands of our towns, is threaten-ed by a fungus called Dutch elm disease. If you have an elm tree, and its leaves turn an unnatural vellor color in June, it may mean your tree is a victim of the disease.

Dutch elm disease is spread by dark beetles which carry the fun-gus. If your tree is attacked, it's best to cut it down as quickly as pos-sible, and burn it, so that the disease won't spread to nearby elms. * * *

Whole towns have been hit by the disease! For instance, Mount Pulaski, Ill., had 600 elms in 1942, but six years later it had only 16—plus 584 hazardous dead tree trunks. Besides losing its fine elms, the rown had to pay about $70 apiece to have the trunks removed! Many towns are fighting the disease with DDT spray and other control methods, and mean-while lots of folks are planting honey locusts and maple as shade trees—cause they resist disease mights well. cause they resist disease mighty well!

* * * I just have room for another safety rule for tree farmers: Before I cut a tree, I always figure out a way of escape—well back and woone side, and at least 20 feet away. I reckon that's just common sense! "What are you aimin' to raise or this property?" Of Hannibal asked the city feller who had just moved in. "Children," the feller replied.

"Shucks," said Hannibal, "aroung here we consider that a sideline!" So long! See you soon!

In the near future, U. S. Department of Agriculture scientists plan to use radioactive cobolt for treatments to help improve or create useful products from cottonseed, pine gum, tung oil, castor oil, fruits, and vegetables.
